

On Saturday Evening, at almost precisely half past one, Miss Molly Drummond was seen entering the establishment of one Miss Bell, followed only two hours later by Miss Chee Man.

Sending in a reporter, he was shocked to find the three promising young ladies dressing up and disguising themselves as their respectable peers! Our source supplied such details as to say that after a short, but complicated game using a folded paper object marked with numbers and colours all three appeared to lose their minds, Miss Drummond using a sticky moustache in an attempt to pass herself off as the highly regarded Mr Isaac Buck, followed shortly by Miss Man smoking a pipe in public, acting as young Henry Schoonmaker! The whole mental charade was climaxed with the owner of the once respectable establishment, Miss Bell, using a hair clip representing our angelic Penelope Hayes, who obviously knows how to behave in public, especially under the surveillance of reporters.

They then proceeded to discuss the highest society circles in New York City, although we could hardly fathom why they seemed to have written a book about it all – what a strange party!

During the course of the evening there were designs made for Calling Cards – but for other people! At the end of the evening, someone started a shocking card game – not the game itself being shocking, but the fact that three young ladies were gambling their food, known as ‘Smarties’ and small chocolates! After a winning streak shared between the hostess and her partner, the final trick saw all bets go into the table, and in this game Miss Chee Man managed to succeed!